

Open University Event 2009

To celebrate the Open University's 40th birthday the Milton Keynes campus is opening its doors for a unique opportunity to see how concepts become reality and would like to invite you to attend!

What's on offer?

Ever fancied a peek into James Bond's department Q – source of all his clever gadgets? The Open University has scientists working on technology that may feature in action movies in the next few years and be in our homes as standard in ten years.

If you have seen the BBC television programmes Coast or The Fossil Detectives you may have wondered how they get made. And how about the science that lies behind them?

See if you have what it takes to be an educational TV presenter of tomorrow

Take a trip back in time to the 1970s

Hear about exploration of space at its outer reaches

Date: Saturday June 27 2009 10 am until 18.00

Venue: Open University, Milton Keynes

The event is suitable for all; we have good disabled access, are easily reached by car/coach but will also run a shuttle from MK Central station.

The event is free of charge and no need to book unless you are coming as a coach load!

For more information about the open day and the other activities they will have on offer please email; anniversary@open.ac.uk